CONCEPT NOTE

Protection of GI products can Provide substantial benefits to the economy of the country on both fronts i.e., domestic and international. It aims to protect the uniqueness and assures the origin and quality of the product. The protection of the GI can make best use of the competitive advantage of a particular region. A product yielded from mother nature or/and human creativity has a distinctive quality and reputation which has to be secured and realised.

GI remains a very important part of the bunch of Intellectual Property Rights. In this era of commercialisation, the role and importance of GI has become much more important. To protect a practice that is present in a particular area without any changes is a big challenge in this globalising world. The GI holders and users face tough competition in the market to sustain their originality. The GI assets are not renewed after 10 years and the right holders do not take steps to protect their GI after some time. They either do not know the methods to protect it or are reluctant in enforcing their rights. In this process, the GI holders at times self-dilute their GI to attract profit and to sustain their business.

Evidences show that this (self)-dilution is a case in India and the major reason is the increasing competition in the market with availability of duplicate and cheaper materials in the market. A common trend is that people forget about the rights and responsibilities that are conferred on them after getting GI registered. The challenges to unauthorised use and deceptive products in the market is not tackled with proper procedures.

THE OBJECTIVES OF THE ROUNDTABLE

GI in itself is a special IP that needs protection. The roundtable would examine the present practices of GI registration and protection. The focus of the roundtable is to examine the issues and challenges faced by GI right holder and an individual who wants to register a GI. Also, the roundtable would focus on the market challenges that are present in front of the GI holders. The round table would examine the nature and protection required to the GI in this competition driven capitalist market system. Speakers form all industry and academia will divulge in different dimensions of GI.
